This paper discusses how an SBR can be organized and operated, how the SBR systems and database can be built and installed, and how quality and performance can be measured and improved. It describes the likely content of broad level plans for design, development and introduction of a SBR. It also describes the review of an existing SBR and determination whether the changes required involve full scale re-engineering, a major enhancement, or simply continuous improvement.

The material is illustrated by a practical example from Statistics Mauritius where a new SBR has recently
